Use these tips to increase your Instagram followers. 1. Share interesting, relevant and beautiful images, if you scroll through your Instagram feed, you may notice a similar photo trend - it could be a meal or a family photo or a yoga post. Take a moment to really see them and know what you're drawing and who you find yourself scrolling past. Then ask yourself why, chances are you'll draw to tell the story. They may be clear and simple, and there is something different from the basic image of a hand holding a Starbucks cup. Take high quality photos first and foremost, it is important for your photos to be of high quality. This means taking a moment to think about the settings, lighting, and background before shooting. For example, if you're in a dark restaurant at lunch, try using natural light from the window to pick up your food or wait until you go out to take a photo with friends. Similarly, if you are shooting at home, look over your shoulder to What's behind you before you take a photo – you don't want the laundry basket overflowing to add clutter to your photos. It could also mean using your smartphone camera altogether and opting for a standalone digital camera instead. For example, my smartphone takes great photos when I'm outside of natural light, but there's something wrong with the phone's camera when I take pictures inside - the lens gives me all my photos purple that I can't fix. If I want to take a picture inside, I take a photo with my DSLR, email myself and then upload it to Instagram from my phone, it's a three-step process that can be annoying, but ensures that high-quality images every time make the picture relevant before you post the image, think of the people you're trying to reach. Who is your community? If you're trying to expand your personal brand as a frugal shopper, you want to get the following with other economical shoppers or with those who want to be economical shoppers. So you probably don't want to save thousands of dollars at designer clothing stores. Similarly, you may not want to post 10 photos a day of your cat. This type of image dilutes your message. Of course, your community must know you as a person, so it's okay to sprinkle your feed with private off-topic images here and there, but it's a good idea to follow the 80/20 rules, keep 80% of your posts focused on your overall message by 20% on other subjects, making Pics interesting. I've asked the photographer if the fitness blogger can take more interesting social photos, and the first thing he says to me is don't share aerial pictures of your running shoes after or before running. He cited trends in the fitness and running community – too many trends. Ultimately, his point is that you want to make your image stand out from what others are doing. With the number of photos uploaded to Instagram every day, this is not a small task, it's not like you want to invent a completely new wheel – it's perfectly good to post a picture of your Starbucks cup, you just have to think about how to make it a little different or weird. For example, if your barista wears a Santa hat while giving you a cup, asking if you can take a photo while he or she sends it to you, or if you're drinking coffee on the beach, take a photo focused on sunrise over the ocean, it's a good idea to consider using the Video or Instagram app to add interest to your android and iPhone photos. As you all sit down to eat. If you're not a video fan, try taking several photos throughout the night by piecing them together for a virtual flip book after you eat. I recently started using Flipagram (an app available on Android, iPhone and Windows Phone) to collect a short slideshow - available. And it makes your image stand out from the crowd. Finally, you don't need to post a plain photo. There are many photo editing apps that allow you to add text overlays or just create text images, InstaQuote is what I use, which is compatible with iPhone and Android. For example, you can place your web address at the bottom of the image, such as a watermark, or you can highlight a specific hashtag that suits the image. For example, I'm starting a campaign for my website called Push Your Boundaries, defying your expectations. With your hashtag #pybbye Any photos I post with #pybbyeແມ່ນໂປດໄດ້ This way, my followers will see the hashtag and are more likely to say, what is this about? Interacting with the community as well as all social networks, it is important to interact with the community to get in. Don't be shy about following other users' feeds. You can do this by going to your Options tab within Instagram, where you can choose to search for friends, then follow friends from Facebook or from your email list. There is also an option to search, recommended for you, by Instagram, select and choose what interests you most. In many cases, a simple follow-up will result in a trace back. When you follow other users, take the time to like or comment on the photos they share. You don't have to spend hours doing this. Just choose the number one image you truly love and write a real comment about the image. For example, you can ask a food blogger what brand of crackers he serves with a favorite dip, or you can ask the photographer which app he uses to edit photos. When you interact with others In many cases, they will comment back and may keep you following as well. And more importantly, their followers are more likely to notice your account, and if you ask questions or post relevant or helpful comments, followers may follow your account as well. It's almost like setting up a domino row – you knock one over and slowly, but of course the ripple effect will happen that eventually rises to more likes and followers. Another easy and effective way to interact with the community is to post pictures of others. However, Instagram is not like Twitter, which is easy to tweet by others. You actually need a third-party app to post new photos. I use the Repost app, which pulls photos from the accounts you follow, making it easy for you to select the photos you want to repost. It The original poster tag credits him or her for the image and informs the original poster that you reposted other people's content. This not only makes it possible to post great pictures that others have taken, but it also shows the original poster that you appreciate his or her content, so he tends to take note of you. You can play this to your advantage by searching for influential Instagrammers in your niche to post new ones from time to time. The key word here is from time to time, you don't want your feed to become most of the content produced by others. If you start a new post, try sticking to the 3:1 ratio of your content to content from others. This way, your feed remains your own. 3. Using and searching for hashtags on Instagram, hashtags can be your best friend. Instagram searches are set up to use hashtags, so by sticking your photo hashtag with relevant words or phrases, your photos tend to be easily found by those interested in your niche. So if you post a picture of your dog, you can use the hashtag #dogsofinstagram to place your photo in the search feed for all the photos with that hashtag. You can search for popular hashtags using Instagram tags to find overall or most popular by category, such as makeup or music, or you can use apps like Tagstagram to copy and paste popular tags directly into your Instagram posts before you publish them to the network. In addition to using hashtags to make more searches, you can also use hashtags to find people interested in your channel. For example, if you are a big fan of yoga, you can search for other hashtags #yoga yogi to connect. This will help expand your reach, in addition to your acquaintance with the wider Instagram community. The key is to post frequently without posting too much. If you take 20 photos while vacationing at Disneyland and throw it into your feed all at once, you'll annoy your followers and get unfollowed. Choose two or three photos that you really love and share individually throughout the day. If you forget to log in to Instagram regularly, take a look at the Schedule app for your smartphone. Now I use the free TakeOff app available on iPhone and Android, but you can also look at Latergramme for iPhone or ScheduGram, while the app can't post to Instagram because of Instagram's API rules, they allow you to schedule your posts, including photos, comments and hashtags. The app will send you a notification at a given time so you remember the post yourself. 5. Promote your account is nothing wrong with A little self-promotion Link your Instagram account to your Facebook and Twitter accounts so you can promote your latest Instagram posts to your other social networks. If you have a website or blog, don't forget to include a social tracking link to your Instagram page on your website and consider including an Instagram gallery in your post. These galleries can be specific to your own Instagram profile, or you can choose a specific hashtag. For example, when I started using the #pybbye hashtag, I plan to combine a photo gallery tagged with hashtags into a blog post about a SnapWidget campaign, a simple and free way to create the HTML needed to add this type of gallery to your website or blog post. And don't forget, it's okay to ask your followers. Send an email to your contacts to ask if someone is on Instagram and suggest a reciprocal arrangement or remind your friends and followers on Facebook and Twitter that you have an account you want to follow. The last word isn't exactly your reason for having an account, make it fun. Will your potential followers and potential followers know that it looks boring to you? But if you're determined to increase your Instagram followers, the most important thing is to stick to it and be patient. You may see significant growth here and there, but like any social platform, long-term consistency is what pays off. Are you on Instagram? How did you grow up following? Following
